Stolitnii A. V. Electronic segment in the criminal procedural legislation of Tajikistan. The article deals with the study of the electronic segment of criminal process in the Tajikistan. The author found that Tajikistan provides a specialized tool for criminal proceedings, which are electronic means of control (similar to domestic «electronic bracelets»). The Law also provides for non-specialized instruments of criminal proceedings, which are defined directly (Unified state register of guaranteed liabilities, Unified state register of real estate and ownership, technical means, scientific and technical means) or indirectly (transcripts, photo, sound, video, film and recording equipment). We investigated how to use evidence that is recorded in electronic format. The law provides that the recording and video recording of the testimony of the defendant, the victim and the witness may be reproduced during the trial. The evidence is telephone conversations, electronic, video and audio recordings of surveillance that have been heard and recorded. The documents also include the results of photography, filming, sound recording and video recording, electronic sources of information and other sources of information. Tajikistan's criminal process involves the electronic recording of investigative actions, in particular: the investigator may apply technical means and use scientifically sound methods of detecting, recording and seizing traces of crime and physical evidence in the course of investigative actions; In order to ensure the completeness of the investigation protocol, the investigator may use shorthand recording, sound recording and video recording; these materials are kept on file. The law also found that the records of investigative actions can be evidence in a criminal case. The accused and the defense counsel may make copies of the documents, including by means of technical means, when familiarizing themselves with the case file. A defendant, who is at liberty, summoned for questioning to the prosecutor, investigator, investigator by telephone or telegram. Photographing, filming and video recording may be made during the trial with the permission of the presiding judge and with the consent of the parties.
